

Contents

List of figures	xi
List of tables	xiii
Acknowledgement	xv
Foreword	xvii
PART I
Capitalism and socialism as modes of production	1
1 Introduction to part I	3
1.1 Categories and concepts	3
1.2 Operational categories	4
1.3 Capitalism and primitive socialism under the meta-mode of production	6
1.4 Socialist-oriented socioeconomic formations	7
BOX 1.1 A non-dichotomist, heuristic concept of socialism: towards an index of socialistic development	9
BOX 1.2 Socialist-oriented economies and socialist-oriented socioeconomic formations	11
2 The hard scientific underpinnings of XXIst century political economy	17
2.1 From God to homo economicus	17
2.2 Competition and cooperation	19
2.3 Early critiques of selfishness worshipping	22
2.4 Behavioral games: achievements and limitations	24
2.5 From behavioral economics to neuroeconomics	26
2.6 Neuroeconomics vs homo economicus	28
2.7 Neuroeconomics and cooperation	31
2.8 Neuroeconomics as an underpinning microfoundation of evolutionary economics	34
2.9 Concluding remarks	36

3	Modes of production and socioeconomic formations	45
3.1	The centrality of the mode of production category	45
3.2	The evolution of Marx's conception of mode of production	46
3.3	Modes of production as abstract systems	50
3.4	Absolute and relative dominance/prevalence of one or more MPs	51
3.5	Socioeconomic formation as concrete, historically existing objects	53
3.6	Towards a categorization of socioeconomic formations	56
4	Labor and value	61
4.1	Productive and non-productive labor	61
4.2	Concrete and abstract labor	63
4.3	Production prices	64
4.4	Labor power and law of value	65
4.5	The transformation problem and the surplus approach consensus	68
5	Real competition, pending issues, and the core propositions of the surplus approach	75
5.1	Real competition and turbulent equilibria	75
5.2	The law of value after perfect competition	77
5.3	Pending issues	78
5.4	Core propositions of the surplus approach	79
5.5	A weak definition of the law of value	80
6	Real socialism and the law of value	84
6.1	Real socialism	84
	BOX 6.1 Socialism, communism, and transition	85
6.2	Marx's insights on socialism in The Critique of the Gotha Program	88
6.3	The law of value and socialism in the XXIst century	89
6.4	Four propositions on capitalism and socialism	92
7	The meta-mode of production	96
7.1	The meta-mode of production as a meta-structure	96
7.2	Four key features of the meta-mode of production	97
7.3	Diversity of development models under the meta-mode of production	98
7.4	Market compatibility and value-based planning	99
8	Socialism under the meta-mode of production	104
8.1	The shift of economic rationality from the individual to the society and the key role of planning	104
8.2	Two sobering lessons	105
8.3	After the fall of the USSR, we are not at square one	106
8.4	"Laws of motion" of socialist-oriented economic development?	110

- BOX 8.1 American imperialism 115*
BOX 8.2 Definitions and interpretations 116

PART II

China's journey from the early agricultural reforms to the New Projectment Economy 119

9 Introduction to Part II 121

- 9.1 Socialism and developmentalism 121*
9.2 Non-capitalist market-oriented enterprises and large State-owned business conglomerates 123

10 Macroeconomic dynamics 125

- 10.1 The crucial role of the real exchange rate 125*
10.2 Proactive exchange rate policies 125
10.3 Trade 127

11 Rural reforms and the rise of non-capitalist market-oriented enterprises 130

- 11.1 Liberalization without privatization in agriculture 130*
11.2 Simple commodity production 131
11.3 Modernization, capitalization, and technification in agriculture 133
11.4 The continuing economic and social importance of agriculture in China 134
11.5 Industrialization, land conversion, and migration 136
11.6 Institutional changes in rural areas 138
11.7 The revamping of the cooperative movement 139
11.8 Another type of NCMOE: the rise and destiny of the township and village enterprises 140
11.9 The complex nature of TVEs' ownership structure 140
11.10 The end of the TVEs era 142

12 The large State-owned business conglomerates 146

- 12.1 The neoliberal counterrevolution 146*
12.2 Socialization of investment 148
12.3 From the initial SOE reforms to modern market-compatible planning 149
12.4 The international scenario 151
12.5 The existential challenge of SOE reform 152
12.6 "Grasping the large": the LSOBCs' formation process 153
12.7 New rural NCMOEs and reforming SOEs: similarities and differences 155
12.8 The strategic role of the productive macro-sector 156

viii Contents

12.9	The Party commands the market	157
12.10	The entrepreneurial State	158
BOX 12.1	Socialism with Chinese characteristics	160
13	The national financial system and the strengthening of China's monetary sovereignty	165
13.1	Financial globalization and its discontents	165
13.2	Finance as a public service	166
13.3	China's autonomy from global hyper-financialization and the contradictions of the shareholding State	166
13.4	Monetary sovereignty	168
13.5	Investments and savings	171
13.6	Financial risks	171
13.7	Concluding remarks	173
14	The dynamics of the new economic and social formation	177
14.1	Introduction	177
14.2	The political economy of market socialism	178
15	NDRC and SASAC: a quantum leap in China's planning and governance capabilities	181
15.1	From planless central plannings to a market socialism with many plans	181
15.2	The national development and reform commission	182
15.3	SASAC as a developmentalist tool	184
15.4	SASAC's protagonist role in industrial reforms	186
15.5	Walking on two legs: SOE strengthening and competition in the Xi era	187
15.6	The resilience of SOEs and their key role to counter the 2020 Covid-induced shock	189
16	The new projectment economy	192
16.1	Rangel in Beijing	192
16.2	The double evolutionary process of political economy	192
16.3	Cost, benefit, and welfare	194
16.4	The noumenal difference between a capitalist economy and a projectment economy	194
16.5	The fall and rise of projectment economy between the XXth and the XXIst centuries	195
16.6	Final remarks	197
BOX 16.1	Projectment, socialism, and reason	198
BOX 16.2	The Chinese communist party	199

PART III
The other two members of the new class of SEF: Vietnam and Laos	203
17 Introduction to part III	205
18 Agricultural reforms and the launching of Doi Moi	208
18.1 Rural reforms in North Vietnam	208
18.2 Doi Moi	210
19 Equitization	215
19.1 1990s: slow pace and contradictions	215
19.2 Acceleration and consolidation in the new century	216
19.3 You can't make an omelette without breaking eggs	217
20 SOE, FDI, and simple commodity production	222
20.1 SOEs	222
20.2 The evolution of the ownership structure	224
21 Employment, wages, and productivity	226
21.1 Structural changes	226
21.2 Lewis is still far away	229
22 Accumulation, growth, and structural change	235
22.1 FDI	235
22.2 Industrialization and tertiarization	235
22.3 Manufacturing	238
22.4 Lack of intersectoral integration	238
22.5 Vietnam's experience in a comparative perspective	244
23 Finance	251
23.1 Central bank and commercial banks	251
23.2 Other financial institutions	252
23.3 The development of Vietnam's financial system	252
23.4 Problems	254
23.5 The banking reform strategy	256
24 Development of productive forces and modernization in Vietnam and China	259
24.1 Growth and industrialization	259
24.2 Accumulation	259
24.3 Structural change	268

x Contents

24.4	International integration	268
24.5	R&D	277
25	Poverty, inequality, and human development	278
25.1	Basic indicators	278
25.2	Inequality: basic trends	284
25.3	Inequality and size	287
25.4	Human Development Index	290
26	The differences between comrades Masina and Cerimele and us	293
26.1	The dark side of Vietnam's development strategy	293
26.2	A half full, half empty glass	296
27	Vietnam and China: brothers, not twins	300
27.1	Vietnam's outstanding development record	300
27.2	China's and Vietnam's performances: respective strengths and weaknesses	302
27.3	Vietnam and China as market-socialist socioeconomic formations	303
28	Laos: the least developed member of the new class of SEFs	306
28.1	The most-bombed country in the world	306
28.2	Laos as a market-socialist socioeconomic formation	308
29	Concluding remarks	316
29.1	Wrapping up a long journey	316
29.2	Theoretical foundations	317
29.3	Planning: potentialities and limitations	318
29.4	Few MPs, many SEFs, one MMP	319
29.5	Productive and non-productive macro-sectors	320
29.6	Socialist-oriented developmental states	321
29.7	First things first: rural reforms	322
29.8	From the re-establishment of markets to market-compatible planning	322
29.9	The Chinese way: institutional innovations and continuity commitments	323
29.10	The "New Projectment Economy" as a higher stage of development of market socialism	325
	Bibliography	329
	Index	373